Preserving its legacy as the very first restaurant serving authentic Thai cuisine in Sri Lanka, Siam House emerges into view with a quaint Thai identity amidst a beautiful garden. Elegant lanterns glow in the well manicured garden and two striking statues of Thai beauties with their palm clasped together welcome the diners to the world of delightful gastronomy. The tantalising aroma in the air tingles the nostrils and soothing Thai music invites diners to a hearty feast. Fascinating Thai art and craft gleaming in gold adorn the restaurant and resemble the classical grandeur of Thailand.

The wooden furniture complements the warm, welcoming ambience of the restaurant. Antique lamps in the corners of the walls, striking watercolor paintings and charming Thai trinkets complete the picture of Far Eastern mystique. Diners can also choose to sit in the garden, out on the verandas, or even in the balcony.

Cuisine at Siam House is prepared around a single concept, to provide diners an opportunity to encounter the exciting flavours of all four regions of Thailand – Northern, Central, Southern and Northeastern. This is realised by their team of Thai master chefs who perfectly create the menu of mouthwatering Thai dishes, using techniques specific to each region. Flavour profiles and even ingredients contrast from one region to another. Siam House uses a range of homemade curry pastes such as red, green, masaman, jungle and yellow to maintain the authenticity. Enjoy generous servings of Thai classics such as Tom Yum Goong – a delectable shrimp soup, Pad Thai stir-fried noodles and Gai Med Ma Mung – stir fried chicken served with cashew nuts and red chilli. Siam House also serves the Thai favourite, Som Tam – a green papaya salad, which combines five exotic flavours. Saku with sweet corn is one of the most popular desserts served at Siam House.
