

Bartleet Electronics sells radio links.

Posted on

The Radio Communications Division of Bartleet Electronics has been sold to the Red Alert Group of Companies. This is part of the Bartleet Electronics move towards re-housing business activities within its core competency in information technology.

According to Bartleet Electronics' Managing Director Sunil Wijesinghe, this move gives them the ability to focus better on resources in their IT customer base ensuring that they receive the latest technology, with substantially improved levels of delivery, service and support. "Our goal is to continue to enhance our core business whilst adding new products and peripherals to our product range in keeping with customer demand."

The Red Alert Group of Companies has been marketing and supporting radio communication equipment for over two decades. It operates the "BELL" Alfa-numeric paging system and is also engaged in hi-tech electronic security systems/advanced, fire detection/protection equipment.