To provide women with convenient access to digital healthcare solutions, DFCC Bank Aloka, the Bank's women's-centric banking proposition, entered into an partnership with Doc990, the digital health solutions service provider powered by Dialog Axiata.

Through this partnership, the DFCC Aloka savings accountholders will now enjoy complimentary access to Doc990's services, helping them to quickly and easily access medical consultations and other services when required.

This facility will also be available to all new DFCC Aloka accountholders, increasing the value proposition presented by DFCC Aloka.

Thimal Perera, CEO of DFCC Bank, said, “We are very pleased to enter this partnership with DOC 990. Through Aloka, we’re offering more than just financial services to the women of Sri Lanka. Amidst a greater need for access to healthcare, with the pandemic and other health issues, and rising transport costs, our Aloka savings accountholders can quickly access medical assistance in an emergency and effectively manage minor ailments without rushing to a hospital. With women playing multiple roles in their lives while also providing care for children and or aging parents, this facility will be a great enabler. Furthermore, it also helps them to minimize risk and increase safety by having access to high-quality medical assistance from wherever they are.”

Supun Weerasinghe, Group Chief Executive of Dialog Axiata, added, “With the increasing need for innovative and accessible health solutions, Doc990 is pleased to join hands with DFCC Aloka to offer women in Sri Lanka easily accessible digital health support round the clock throughout the year. Doc990 is pleased to facilitate women with progressive digital health technology that will enable them to conveniently and confidently address any health-related concern.”

DFCC Bank was ranked amongst Business Today’s Top 40 Corporates in Sri Lanka.
