The National Institute of Business Management, now offers students the opportunity to gain internationally recognised qualifications, without having to leave the country, at a fraction of the cost of studying abroad. Students may enrol in these courses immediately after their A/L examinations.

Among these are the BSc in Management and BSc in Human Resources Management from the University College Dublin. These programmes are designed to help participants acquire a strong understanding of business processes and procedures and to develop the skills necessary for a successful career in today's competitive business environment.

Students will gain an advanced knowledge of theoretical business models and conceptual frameworks, as well as the ability to apply them to real business situations, as well as the capacity to identify and critically review business problems and provide solutions in local and international settings. They will be able to demonstrate unique interpersonal communication and leadership skills resulting from group interaction, case discussions and presentations and master the skills to undertake and complete independent research project work, thus establishing themselves as professionals who would be an asset to any organisation.

Each stage of the programme is a complete qualification in itself, giving students the option to proceed to the next stage, or leave with a recognised certificate. The first stage leads to an Advanced Diploma in Business Management, while the second stage results in a Higher Diploma in Business Management. The last two years of the degree programme consist of part time study, so they have the freedom to gain work experience while gaining a world-class degree.
